The Trials

The Green Dress

Step into a 1958 Bradford courtroom in The Green Dress, a powerful educational workshop that blends immersive theatre with critical historical inquiry. Written by one of our experienced volunteers, who has over 40 years' experience within the police service, this workshop invites participants to examine not just what happened, but why it matters - in a time when the verdict could mean life or death.

Was it cold-blooded murder or a tragic accident born of fear, control, and silence? Set against a backdrop of 1950s societal norms, the case probes deep questions around domestic abuse, gender roles, and legal bias. Through active participation, students will explore how evidence, prejudice, and perception shape justice - and how far we've come (or not) since.

The Final Step

Step into the charged atmosphere of a Victorian courtroom with this immersive, scripted workshop based on the real-life trial of Francis William Neale, accused of murdering his wife, Esther Neale, in Bradford in 1888. Drawing directly from historical sources and structured like a genuine 19th-century court case, this experience invites students to take on the roles of barristers, witnesses, jurors, and the accused in a dramatic re-enactment of a high-stakes criminal trial.

Set against the backdrop of Victorian social values and justice systems, the trial reveals how issues such as domestic abuse, alcohol use, gender roles, and class shaped the outcome of criminal proceedings
